Rush discovers it has a future in music trade

By Jon Abbott

It has been over 17 years, but the numbers of Rush have finally acknowledged that the band has a future in the music business. "We really have never looked to a long future until now," drummer Neil Peart said by phone from New York City, "OK, we'll make the next record and then we'll go on tour again, and then we'll see how it goes." Those kinds of little decisions that "might be a no-brainer," Peart said of touring. "But there are choices you handle in a mature way. The chemistry between Connery and De Niro was evident throughout the film. Connery's portrayal was captivating and De Niro's was equally impressive."